

OPEN CALL: CONNECTING 2026/27

Exhibiting as a Social Process

With our curatorial program CONNECTING 2026/27, we are looking for artistic and curatorial projects that understand the exhibition space not only as a place of presentation but also as a space for collective action and social processes. Against the backdrop of current social and cultural-political challenges, we aim to strengthen the space as a cultural commons and to further develop it as a platform for community-oriented, diversity-conscious, and participatory practices.

C O N N E C T I N G focuses on the relationships within curatorial practice and the exhibition space, where connections between artists, audiences, curators, and society are actively shaped. The presentation of art takes a back seat to the idea of art as a tool for creating communities.

We especially invite projects that address:

- questions of solidarity
- the shaping of relationships between different groups
- the social, economic, and political conditions of exhibiting

CONNECTING is aimed at artists, collectives, curators, and mediators who work collaboratively and seek to build long-term relationships with communities and urban publics.

What we are looking for:

- Concepts that understand space as a social resonance space
- Participatory, process-oriented approaches
- Diverse perspectives and intersectional approaches
- An accompanying educational program with a clear focus on accessibility
- Measures ensuring accessibility (spatial, linguistic, structural)

What we offer:

- Free use of the exhibition space in Berlin-Mitte
- Curatorial and structural support
- Communication support
- Access to local networks, educational cooperations, and partners
- Opportunities for collaborative development of your format
